“Taste of Honey” is supposedly a collection of sixteen connected short stories, but stands on its own as a fully developed novel. Set in fictitious Gateway City (St. Louis) on the Mississippi River during the sixties, it covers a few months in the lives of a middle class black family living in a segregated section of town.

A Taste of Honey: Stories by Jabari Asim

A Taste of Honey is set in Salford in North West England in the 1950s. It tells the story of Jo, a seventeen-year-old working class girl, and her mother, Helen, who is presented as crude and sexually indiscriminate. Helen leaves Jo alone in their new flat after she begins a relationship with Peter, a rich lover who is younger than she.

A Taste of Honey - Wikipedia

A Taste of Honey was startlingly original in its focus on two working-class women. There had been some plays about working-class men, but shaping the action around women's lives, domesticity, sex and motherhood, was new. The play tells the story of single mother Helen and her teenage daughter, Jo.
