Too often, when it comes to choosing whether to be, stay, or break-up with someone, we let our hearts be our guides. But when it comes to a committed partnership, feelings are a false guide; there's no way to share a house, family, life, savings account, and/or bathroom with someone for eternity and not feel some sort of bad a lot of the time.

F*ck feelings: our m*nifesto. If you want to make good decisions or get good advice about them, don't pay too much attention to your feelings. This may sound like strange advice coming from a psychiatrist who does "therapy," since most people see a shrink because they've got feelings they want to share, "get out," understand or resolve, much as they see it done on TV, assuming that sharing their feelings is healthy and will prevent them from building up and causing stress and ...
