Charlotte Elisheva Fonrobert's chapter on gender duality presents the legal conundrum of the androgynous body in a Jewish legal system that is based on the duality of the sexes. Fonrobert shows how Talmudic Rabbis grapple with a third gender category that complicates their categories of male and "other."

Jewish law, or halacha, recognises gender ambiguity, and has done so throughout Jewish history. However, unlike the modern concept of gender identity, this ambiguity is defined according to physical presentation (or lack thereof) and primary and secondary sexual characteristics. The concept of a Tumtum being a person of ambiguous gender and/or sex is dealt with, as is the concept of the androgynos, being a person characterised with elements of both genders.

We must recognise the ways in which our upbringing and experiences shape how we view the relationship between the sexes. In Muslim circles, oftentimes the conversation surrounding the role of men and the role of women centres around what one gender should do for the other. However, without having a comprehensive understanding of the relationship between men and women in Islam, it can leave room for oppression, misunderstanding, and/or one party not fulfilling their rights.

Islam is totally opposed to monasticism and celibacy. Marriage is an act of Sunnah in Islam and is strongly recommended. Men can only marry the "people of the book" i.e., Abrahamic religions. Women can only marry a Muslim man. Ancient times: unlimited polygamy with concubinage. In modern times, monogamy

Although the gender of God in Judaism is referred to in the Tanakh with masculine imagery and grammatical forms, traditional Jewish philosophy does not attribute the concept of sex to God. At times, Jewish aggadic literature and Jewish mysticism do treat God as gendered. The ways in which God is gendered have also changed across time, with some modern Jewish thinkers viewing God as outside of ...

Traditional and Modern Roles of Women in Judaism, Christianity, and Islam. The role of women in religions of the peoples of the world, especially in the Judeo-Christian group, seems insignificant just at the first glance. We will not see many women among the most common types of so-called "religious people", for example, among the prophets, saints and religious reformers, founders of religions or new trends in religions.
